What Is a RAB?

A Restoration Advisory Board, or RAB, is an advisory board made up of interested and concerned community members who reflect the diverse interests of the local community as well as representatives of state, local, and federal agencies. The RAB is designed to serve as a focal point for the exchange of information between AFP PJKS (owned by USAF and operated by Lockheed Martin) and the community regarding those restoration activities presently underway as well as those planned for future studies and remediation.

Through the RAB, the community receives increased understanding of the cleanup issues and the progress being made. The RAB allows community representatives early participation in the planning and decision-making process. It also increases the plant's responsiveness to the community's environmental restoration concerns.

The RAB allows for early and continued two-way flow of information, concerns, values, and needs between the local community and those at AFP PJKS who are responsible for the Installation Restoration Program, or IRP.

Installation Restoration Program

The U.S. Department of Defense, or DoD, has initiated an environmental cleanup program at military properties known as the Installation Restoration Program (IRP). The purpose of the IRP is to identify, evaluate, and cleanup past environmental contamination. It establishes a process by which past disposal sites, migration of contaminants, and potential hazards to human health and the environment are reviewed, analyzed, and documented for cleanup.

A fundamental aspect of the IRP is the involvement of the community. The Restoration Advisory Board (RAB) has been established for this reason. The RAB provides a forum in which community members can be involved in the restoration process. Through the RAB, they are given the opportunity to learn more about the restoration process, ask questions about the procedures for cleanup, and advise those responsible for the restoration.

What Do RAB Members Do?

Restoration Advisory Board (RAB) members, serving in an advisory capacity, meet on a regular basis with the AFP PJKS representatives and others involved with the Installation Restoration Program (IRP) to:

- Review, evaluate, and comment on plans relating to the ongoing environmental studies and restoration activities at AFP PJKS
- Identify project requirements
- Recommend priorities among sites or projects

Through the RAB, members can have an effect on cleanup activities that accelerate the restoration process.

RAB members act as liaisons with their individual community groups to keep others informed of the IRP. They may also be available to meet and discuss the IRP activities with various community groups. Technical and administrative support staff are available to RAB members to provide informational explanations and support.

A community member serves as cochairperson for the RAB with a representative from AFP PJKS. All RAB meetings are open to the public. One need not be an official member of the RAB to attend.
